Know Your H2O

The human body is made up of mostly water and depends upon it to keep the bodily systems functioning properly.

Drinking water allows you to stay healthy. If it contains enough fluoride, it can also help build strong teeth and prevent tooth decay.

Health experts recommend drinking 8 cups of water a day. This will vary a little depending upon body size, physical activity, and exposure to hot weather.

Some people are now drinking bottled water for their main source of water. Some even forgo tap water altogether for bottled water. The problem with this, is that bottled water does not usually have fluoride in it and you will be missing out on the benefits.

Even though some bottled water does contain fluoride, the amount can vary widely and it usually does not contain enough to be of any value.

The reason the bottled water does not contain enough fluoride has to do with the treatment of the water before it is bottled. If the manufacturer does happen to add fluoride after treatment, then they will list it on the label. But to be of any value, the amount has to be within a narrow range.

So, how much is enough? One part per million is the answer. This is usually written as 1.0 ppm. Much less than 1.0 and it will not prevent tooth decay.

If you ingest ten times more than 1.0 ppm, then it can actually damage the enamel. The tooth will be resistant to decay, but it will not be very pretty to look at. But ingest is the key word here. Using a fluoridated toothpaste does not do any damage; as it is rinsed out, not ingested. A very important distinction.

So please read your labels and introducing that realize fluoride to our drinking water is one of mankind's all-time greatest achievements.

Trick or Treat Reminder. For those of you with braces on, Halloween candy should be restricted to plain chocolates. Nothing sticky, chewy, or crunchy! Sorry.
